

For many of the reformers of the period, urban poverty and homelessness were remedial social ills, and their manifestations were commercialized vice and urban crime. It was the duty of policymakers and citizens, with the help of data collectors and researchers, to cure the causes and symptoms. From its inception, the Journal included police administrators and those who studied the police as agents of social control among their contributors and on their editorial and advisory board. The Journal also published and commented upon official reports from prisons and law enforcement agencies, notes on national, international and state legislation, and analytical reports on crime and offenses from other states and countries.

The Criminology of the Period: The Official Reports on Crime and Vice

Three important governmental reports on crime and vice during this period were issued by special Commissions and Committees.¹⁶⁶ These official reports offer a wealth of social and criminological data, and in many ways remain exemplary models for research. They will only be briefly noted here. The 1929 Illinois Crime Survey especially deserves much careful study from present day researchers.¹⁶⁷ It includes detailed analyses and descriptions of the operations of the court system, the police, as well as essays on organized crime, homicide and felonies. Two other civic commissions on vice and crime, in 1911 and 1915, are also enormously valuable for an understanding of crime and its social context in these periods. In addition, three less ambitious, official, contemporaneous reports on the police themselves show the police responding to the concerns of the public, ward politicians, and government officials and include a description of the police as a bureaucratic institution, including charts of its administra-

Mark Haller, Urban Crime and Criminal Justice. The Chicago Case, 57 J. AM. HIST. 619 (1970).

¹⁶⁶ These reports are The Social Evil in Chicago, the Report of the City Council Committee on Crime of the City of Chicago, and The Illinois Crime Survey. See THE VICE COMM'N OF CHI., supra note 6; ALDERMAN CHARLES E. MERRIAM, REPORT OF THE CITY COUNCIL COMMITTEE ON CRIME OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO (1915); ILL. ASS'N FOR CRIMINAL JUSTICE, THE ILLINOIS CRIME SURVEY, supra note 96.

¹⁶⁷ The most detailed and ambitious of these official governmental reports, which came late enough to benefit from the extensive academic development of urban sociology in Chicago, and particularly relevant to the researchers on this Project, is the 1929 Illinois Crime Survey. This report includes: August Vollmer, The Police (in Chicago), in THE ILLINOIS CRIME SURVEY, supra note 96, at 357-72; Arthur Lashly, Homicide (in Cook County), in THE ILLINOIS CRIME SURVEY, supra note 96, at 593-640; John Landesco, Organized Crime (in Chicago), in THE ILLINOIS CRIME SURVEY, supra note 96, at 813-1100.

tive structure.¹⁶⁸

THE 1911 CHICAGO VICE COMMISSION REPORT; THE REPORT OF THE CITY COUNCIL COMMITTEE ON CRIME OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO IN 1915, AND THE 1929 ILLINOIS CRIME SURVEY

The 1911 Chicago Vice Commission Report

The 1911 Chicago Vice Commission was appointed by reform Mayor Fred A. Busse and was comprised of representatives of the professions and important civic institutions in the city.¹⁶⁹ The Commission had prostitution and the white slave trade as its primary concerns; however, it also included extensive reporting on the role of the police and the connection between the sale of liquor, saloons, and prostitution.¹⁷⁰

Reform efforts always had the regulation of saloons and the question of the possible banning of alcohol in their background. The saloons were regulated by licenses given out by the Mayor's office. City regulations on closing hours and how and when they could ad-

¹⁶⁸ See CHL. (ILL.) CIVIL SERVICE COMM'N, supra note 131 (containing three reports addressing the administration of the Chicago Police Department).

¹⁶⁹ Created by an ordinance of the City Council of Chicago, with doctors, lawyers, professors of academic institutions, representatives of the religious community and the business and professional elite, its purpose was:

to inquire into conditions existing within the limits of the city with reference to vice of various forms including all practices which are physically and morally debasing and degrading, and which affect the moral and physical welfare of the inhabitants of the city. The Commission shall from time to time transmit to the Mayor and the City Council, a written report of existing conditions, as it may find them, respecting vice, with such recommendations as it shall deem advisable for the suppression thereof.

THE VICE COMM'N OF CHL., supra note 6, at 6 (quoting the Chicago ordinance creating the Commission). The Commission held ninety-eight conferences within six weeks and received the support of the principal civic organizations in the city as it prepared its Report. Id. at 9.

¹⁷⁰ The Report states:

The Commission has found in its investigation that the most dangerous immoral influence, and the most important financial interest, outside of the business of prostitution as carried on in houses, is the disorderly saloons. The proprietors of these places are using prostitutes as an adjunct to the sale of beer and liquor, and are allowing them to openly solicit for immoral purposes in their rear rooms . . . During the period of its investigation the Commission has secured definite information regarding 445 saloons in different parts of the city. The investigators have counted 929 unescorted women in these saloons, who by their actions and conversation were believed to be prostitutes. In fact they were solicited by more than 236 women in 236 different saloons, all of whom, with the exception of 98, solicited for rooms, "hotels," and houses of prostitution over the saloons.

Id. at 34-5.

vertise or open their doors or windows proliferated. The police had the discretion not to enforce these regulations. The number of ordinances and their contradictory aspects, as well as the recognized policy of the state legislature to leave regulation of the city to home rule, were reasons for the absence of law enforcement in the vice districts.

Mayor Busse was swept into office on a reform ticket, although later commentators have questioned how much he was able to accomplish. Certainly the 1912 “closing,” or refusing to tolerate under the former terms, the segregated vice districts was a milestone.¹⁷¹ Ironically, sitting on the City Council and voting for the creation of the Commission in 1911 were two council members who allegedly controlled much of the prostitution and other illegal enterprises in the Loop.¹⁷²

Mayor Busse appointed his own Superintendent of Police who reported that the segregated vice districts of the city were “beyond the control of law enforcement.”¹⁷³ The vice districts were reputed to have no legitimate law enforcement there. The Commission blamed the police, but saw other elements as accomplices.¹⁷⁴ Police discre-

¹⁷¹ One author notes:

While commercialized vice in Chicago has persisted in spite of ‘lids,’ closings and moral crusades, it has never returned in the flagrant form in which it existed in 1912 and it has not concentrated in an open, accessible mart like that of the old Twenty-second Street district. Chicago’s vice resorts, dispersed through a wide area of the city, are subdued and unobtrusive.

WALTER C. RECKLESS, VICE IN CHICAGO 8 (1933).

¹⁷² “The motion prevailed . . . by yeas and nays as follows: Yeas—Kenna, Coughlin . . .” THE VICE COMMISSION OF CHICAGO, supra note 6, at 5. The votes of Aldermen Kenna and Coughlin refer to Mike “Hinky Dink” Kenna and Bathhouse John Coughlin, Aldermen who represented the notorious first ward on the Levee. See SIMPSON, supra note 76, at 50.

¹⁷³ According to the report:

The tolerance and indifference toward the law by the citizens have gone so far in Chicago that for years the people have seen develop under their very eyes a system of restricted districts under police regulation, the result of which has been to nullify the law, and render it inoperative. . . . So it happens that the people of Chicago, by their tacit consent, have put aside the operation of the law, and made it a thing to be manipulated this way or that, according to expediency.

THE VICE COMM’N OF CHI., supra note 6, at 144. The new General Superintendent of Police “found that there were certain so-called restricted districts where the operation of law had been nullified by custom and precedent.” Id. This regime did make an attempt to at least document this situation.

¹⁷⁴ The report states:

Again, it is submitted that it is not fair to lay the blame entirely upon the police, the servants of the people, who as servants, do their employer’s will. As a result of this attitude toward the law on the part of the community, the police department has been in a sense demoralized and has come to exercise a discretion which was never intended it should have.

Id. at 144.

tion was identified as part of the problem.¹⁷⁵ The police had too much responsibility, and hence were subject to being bribed. How these allegations might be verified almost one hundred years later is a question left for another day.

In keeping with the reform agenda and the broad civic and religious concerns of the Committee in 1911, the recommendations include legislation, provisions for sex education, the establishment of venereal disease clinics, and other practical findings. Consistent with its moral and religious roots, the Commission did not see the “solution” to these problems as lying in the reform of the law.¹⁷⁶ The Report also commented frankly about the economic incentives to prostitution¹⁷⁷ and the role of racial segregation¹⁷⁸ in the protection and ¹⁷⁵ The report further notes:

One of the Municipal Court judges who appeared before the Commission in a conference said that in his opinion “it is this discretion which makes graft in the police department possible. . . . We have in every large city in this country the anomalous situation of the police officers, the guardians of the law, attempting to regulate an unlawful business, a condition which is certain to produce more or less corruption.”

Id.

¹⁷⁶ The report states:

SUMMARY:

First. Custom and precedent has established in Chicago certain restricted districts, where the laws and ordinances of the state and city are practically inoperative in supporting houses of prostitution.

Second. Because of this condition certain public officials have given a certain discretion to the Police Department and have allowed police rules and regulations to take the place of the law and ordinances in these districts.

Third. As a result of this discretion certain members of the police force have become corrupt and not only fail to strictly obey the rules and regulations in the restricted districts themselves, but have failed to adequately enforce the law and ordinances, outside the restricted districts.

Fourth. This attitudes has not only been assumed toward the law and rules and regulations, but has resulted in failure to report to headquarters places in all section of the city where immoral and dissolute persons congregate.

Fifth. In addition, officers on the beat are bold and open in their neglect of duty, drinking in saloons while in uniform, ignoring the solicitations by prostitutes in rear rooms and on the streets, selling tickets at dances frequented by professional and semi-professional prostitutes; protecting “cadets,” prostitutes and saloon keepers of disorderly places.

Id. at 160

¹⁷⁷ The report elaborates:

The Economic Side of the Question. The life of an unprotected girl who tries to make a living in a great city is full of torturing temptations. First, she faces the problem of living on an inadequate wage: Six dollars a week is the average in mercantile establishments. . . . Hundreds, if not thousands, of girls from country towns, and those born in the city but who have been thrown on their own resources, are compelled to live in cheap boarding or rooming houses on the average wage promotion of prostitution in the city.¹⁷⁹ The social evil was prostitution, but the social consequence was venereal disease which was not curable with penicillin until after World War I. Although the influence of the temperance movement on the Commission was strong, the Commission did not recommend a complete ban on the sale of alcohol, even in the vice districts. Its recommendations primarily concerned the protection, education, and treatment of children, and the provision of medical treatment to persons with venereal disease.¹⁸⁰

The concern for juveniles, and the connection between crime, unemployment, and the lack of education and opportunity for young men and women¹⁸¹ persisted through all of these reform movements and was a hallmark of the Progressive era. All three of these Reports of six dollars. How do they exist on this sum? It is impossible to figure it out on a mathematical basis. If the wage were eight dollars per week, and the girl paid two and a half dollars for her room, one dollar for laundry, and sixty cents for car fare, she would have less than fifty cents left at the end of the week. That is provided she ate ten cent breakfasts, fifteen cent luncheons and twenty five cent dinners. . . .

Id. at 42–43.

¹⁷⁸ The report explains:

Invariably the larger vice districts have been created within or near the settlements of colored people. In the past history of the city, nearly every time a new vice district was created downtown or on the South Side, the colored families were in the district, moving just ahead of the prostitutes. . . . In summing up it is an appalling fact that practically all of the male and female servants connected with houses of prostitution in vice districts and in disorderly flats in residential sections are colored. The majority of entertainers in disorderly saloons on the South Side are colored men who live with, and in part upon, the proceeds of white women. The apparent discrimination against the colored citizens of the city in permitting vice to be set down in their very midst is unjust, and abhorrent to all fair minded people.

Id. at 38–39.

¹⁷⁹ The report notes:

A former Chief of Police gave out a semi-official statement to the effect that so long as this degenerate group of persons confined their residence to districts west of Wabash avenue and east of Wentworth avenue they would not be apprehended. This part of the city is the largest residence section of colored families.

Id. at 38.

¹⁸⁰ The sale of cocaine by prescription was allowed, but regulated, in pharmacies at the time of this report. Use of cocaine in the vice districts and elsewhere was common. See id. at 317–19.

¹⁸¹ Consider that:

In addition to this proximity to immoral conditions young colored girls are often forced into idleness because of a prejudice against them, and they are eventually forced to accept positions as maids in houses of prostitution. Employment agents do not hesitate to send colored girls as servants to these houses. They make the astounding statement that the law does not allow them to send white girls but they will furnish colored help!

Id. at 38.

are replete with statistics and recommendations regarding juveniles, juvenile detentions, and the criminal justice system. The data in this 1911 Report suggest several avenues for further research using the 1911 database in conjunction with these homicide files.¹⁸²

Mayor Busse was defeated after one term, and the reform efforts apparently diminished after his regime ended.¹⁸³

The 1915 Chicago City Council Report of Crime

Following the 1911 Chicago Vice Commission, the 1915 Chicago City Council Report was even more ambitious and sophisticated, a path-breaking effort to describe patterns in crime, especially juvenile crime, and to use that analysis for public policy recommendations.¹⁸⁴

The Chicago City Council Report¹⁸⁵ is noteworthy today for its scope and broad policy agenda. The Report includes information on arrest patterns, dispositions, descriptive statistics on juvenile defendants and probation, and reports on professional criminals and the re-

¹⁸² For example, the 1911 Vice Commission Report lists the number of houses of prostitution in each police precinct by precinct number. A number of homicide reports in this data set include precinct number, and could be matched with precincts with large or small numbers of houses of prostitution to see whether homicides were less, or greater in those districts with a large number of houses of prostitution, or whether there was an absence of reporting of homicides in some periods in those districts. Or, to test the extent of the absence of law enforcement or the effect of “closing” the segregated vice district, the number of homicides, or the number of arrests and convictions for murder or manslaughter before, during or after the official closing could be compared. See THE VICE COMM’N OF CHI., supra note 6, tbls. I–V, 357–61.

¹⁸³ This is how a contemporaneous observer described late nineteenth century reform efforts in Chicago:

They [the reformers] had no theory at all—nothing but wrath, experience, common Chicago sense, and newspapers ready to back reform, not for the news, but for the common good. Theories they had tried; and exposures, celebrated trials, even some convictions of boodlers. They had gone in for a civil service reform law, and, by the way, they got a good one, probably the best in any city in the country. But exposures are good only for one election; court trials may punish individuals, but even convictions do not break up a corrupt system; and a “reform law” without reform citizenship is like a ship without a crew. With all their ‘reforms,’ bad government persisted. There was that bear garden—the City Council; something ought to be done to that . . .

STEFFENS, supra note 15.

¹⁸⁴ The 1915 Chicago City Council Report includes extensive statistics and tables on various kinds of crime from 1905 until 1913, and an extensive bibliography. The Report includes statistics comparing murder and other offenses with similar offenses in New York City and London. This Report lists 262 murders in Chicago for the year 1913, in comparison to 131 for New York during the year and 36 for London for the same year. MERRIAM, supra note 166, at 9.

¹⁸⁵ See MERRIAM, supra note 166.